

Jeff and Gail,

So.....You will remember I had you do the body scan on me a few months ago.....

The report showed that I was super dehydrated, which I thought was very strange since I almost exclusively drink water. So.....

I started drinking filtered water.

There's more to the story.

I'll spare you all the boring details but turns out I have a super rare tumor on an adrenal gland. There are almost zero signs for this until you start putting everything together. One major sign is dehydration.

And, of course, I wouldn't have known I was dehydrated without the scan. So, thanks for saving my life and stuff.

The tumor will be removed and **hopefully** it should not come back. 90% of these tumors are benign, but it's not the threat of cancer that's the biggest deal. I don't understand all the scientific language, but basically it messes with hormone levels, blood pressure, kidneys and your heart. I'm starting the "prep work" in the next week or so to get my body ready for the removal.

I thought I had a Urinary Tract Infection. 6 weeks and 10 tests later I have a rare tumor. Ridiculous.
